Theft Crimes cover many areas of criminal law. Here are a few theft crimes: Theft The felonious taking and removing of another's personal property with the intent to permanently deprive the true owner thereof; larceny. 2. Broadly, any act or instance of stealing, including larceny, burglary, embezzlement, and false pretenses. Theft By Deception The use of deception to obtain another's property. Theft By False Pretext The use of a false pretext to obtain another's property. Theft Of Services The act of obtaining services from another by deception, threat, coercion, stealth, mechanical tampering, or using a false token or device. Embezzlement The illegal transfer of money or property that, although possessed legally by the embezzler, is diverted to the embezzler personally by his or her fraudulent action. Extortion Obtaining money or property by threat to a victim's property or loved ones, intimidation, or false claim of a right (such as pretending to be an IRS agent).

Identity Theft Identity Theft primarily involves either "true name" or "account takeover" fraud. With "true name" someone uses a consumer's personal information to open new accounts in his or her name. With "account takeover" someone gains access to a person's existing account(s) and makes fraudulent charges. Another form of identity theft occurs when a criminal provides a victim's personal information to law enforcement when the criminal gets arrested. The victim may then have a criminal record or outstanding warrants attached to their name without even realizing it.
